To whom it may concern,

The basic events of my life and in my life, since meeting Bhogwon, appear to be the same. eating, sleeping, working etc and yet that is such a vast difference between 'then' + 'now'. It is hard to put into words. I have become part of a large family, who share, care, love, laugh + live life to its maximum with our love for Bhogwon the centre of it all. To be lucky enough to be living now and be able to be in the presence of such a master who has shown us and is still showing us the way to live in harmony with each other and everything around us, is indescribable.

I was brought up in a close family living in England - that closeness has now extended to such a large family and with Bhogwa to learn from, can extend even further. I have visited Rajmattshpuram during the two annual celebrations and for summer vacations, to sit with Bhagwan and enjoy the city that is being entered here.

So much has happened, so fast and yet with none of the tensions and pressures that so often happen normally when people work such long hours every day of their life. Its all done without any special effort, everyone has so much energy and can work in this way and it is only when comparing to other places in the world that a difference is seen.

At Rajneshpuram, it is normal.

Its worship and love of Bhagwan.
