To whom it may concern.

I'm writing and painting children's books. "Hans and Peter", "Dominique and the Dragon" are two of them being published by Harcourt Brace and Longmans. The others were published in Switzerland by Atlantis, In London by Oxford University Press, and in Japan.

I studied psychology and education and took my degrees from Hamburg University, West Germany. For six years I worked in a therapeutic children's communtiy. But I always felt that my work - also as a writer of children's books - was too much influenced by method and theory. I could not penetrate that space where a child is coming from - so that I wouldn't write about them, but look at the world with the innocence and playfulness as a child does. Of course nobody in the University could help me on that way.

It was only when I met Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh that I knew I had found somebody who is not only talking about that inner space, but who has realized it in himself and can help me to find it in myself. Reading his books and doing his meditation techniques, I didn't only get an insight into the human mind far beyond all the teachings at the University, but I also found a way to enter into those deeper layers within me, where true creativity and playfulness come from. He is the only psychologist and pedagogue I have ever met who can speak and teach about the inner world of a child, and show you at the same time the way to find it in yourself.

But he is even more than that: a man of wisdom, a religious teacher whose influence reaches the farthest corners of the world. He's the first mystic in the history of mankind whose teachings are being studied in Universities during his lifetime.
