To whom it may concern.

I hold degrees in experimental psychology from the University of Southampton, England (B.Sc., 1973) and from University College, London (M. Phil. 1975). My post-academic experience in group therapeutic situations includes training with Simon Myerson, Ischa Bloomberg and R. D. Laing, as well as in-training participation in group processes of every sort, ranging from the industrial to the loosely-clinical.

The published teaching of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh constitutes, in my professional opinion, the most important contribution to psychological science made by a single individual in this century. Single-handedly he has laid the foundations for a revolution in humanistic psychology that will be global in impact. His is without doubt the most exceptional psychological insight of modern times.

Yours sincerely,

Glenn Francis
