

To whom it may concern,

My life has been completely transformed by the work of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh and in such an outstanding way that I cannot begin to describe how much he has given to me. My first years with him were spent in the Poona ashram, India, where I was able to sit with him and listen to many of his discourses. Even then he said how his words were only a device to keep our minds occupied while a totally separate process was simultaneously happening, one of communion between disciple and master.

Because this communion is one of silence and love, the fact that Bhagwan Shree does not talk to us anymore is absolutely irrelevant. In fact, my experience of being with him during the festival this summer was more intense and beautiful than ever, and as far as I am concerned there can be no doubt that his work on us is continuing. Words cannot be proof of silence, but visiting Rajneeshpur is proof of how much is possible through his message to the world, and how we can all benefit from this man's remarkable abilities.
