To Whom It May Concern

I write as a social psychologist, formerly on the faculty of the University of Chicago and of Northwestern University, who is interested in the relation of psychology and religion. Next year I will be studying theology at Harvard Divinity School.

I understand that there is the possibility of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service admitting to permanent resident status the religious teacher and psychologist Rajneesh, under a category for "exceptional and outstanding" persons. He is definitely that, and I hope he can be admitted. He is a serious teacher of an authentic and significant tradition whose study has value and interest to scholars and others in this country.

At Harvard Divinity School, his work is to be included in a new course to be offered by Professor Malcolm David Eckel of the Center for the Study of World Religions. There is much interest in Rajneesh's work, and his presence in this country is a substantial contribution.

Very truly yours,

Jack Sawyer
