To whom it may concern.

In 1975 I finished a 2-year agricultural school. The following 5 years I tried different kinds of farmwork, and experienced very close the power and the beauty of nature. At this time questions rose in me about the innermost mysteries of life, and I got more and more lost about my own situation as being a part of a highly industrialized society. I got more and more the idea, that I was a destructive being, and that science and technology were only destructive.

In 1980 I left Sweden for a 5-month journey to the East. In March 1980 I met Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh in Poona, India. Through his discourses and his responses to my questions my total approach towards life changed into a more relaxed and more creative attitude.

After returning home, his religious books and videotapes has been an every-day inspiration for me to use my own potential and intelligence in every field of my life.

Instead of saying no to science and technology, I decided to go deep into these questions. I started to study mathematics and physics in an evening school. In 1982 I began to study mechanical engineering at Chalmers University of Technology, Göteborg, Sweden. So I'm now one of the 17 coragous female students in the 240 students big class.

All through this winter, Bhagwan's religious books has been a tremendous inspiration for me. His understanding of the total universe and his approach toward the sciences far surpasses anything available in my university library. Bhagwan's teaching also helps me to go deep into my studies and at the same time always remember the total environment of every smaller problem. Bhagwan's approach also has a beauty that adds an often missed dimension to mathematics and technology. Also the loving support from the Rajneesh Meditation Center in Göteborg makes me more awake and efficient in my studies.

This summer I have visited Rajneeshpuram, and I have once again experienced Bhagwan's presence as a tremendous opportunity for me to be more awake and more creative.

His presence as a religious teacher and a spiritual leader is a beautiful opportunity for everyone that listens to and/or love him, to expand their lives into new fields, and to become a benefit of science and welfare of the world.

Sincerely
